O. U. A.—SPECIAL NOTICE.—THE MEMSERS OF Derivation of a control of the control of coous metar and beautiful workmanship; but, Mr. Chairman, it receives, in my view, its greatest value from the fact, that it is a memento from the employer to the employer.

How rare are such occurrences, and how frequently the reverse is the case! And if I have succeeded in obtaining the esteem and good will of the intelligent workmen connected with the late firm of Bliss & Creighton, and the present one of Creighton & Bisck, I feel proud and happy; and I trust the day is far distant when the present relations existing between us shall be dissolved. Yes, gentlemen, I hope that we shall be long associated to our mutual advantage; for the relations between the employer and the employed are those of mutual benefit, and the moment these benefits cease to be reciprocal, the fabric falls to the ground. The day has gone by when the employer could assume an aristocratic position, and cause the face of patient industry to blush when it was called mechanic. Sir. I consider the farmer and the mechanic to be the bone and site with the land; and in this free and enlightened country I know of no prouder title than that of the good and shifful mechanic. Gentlemen, I again return my warmest thacks for your valuable present, and I trust that your feature occurs may be as prosperous as the most sanguine among you could desire.
